

Lauren Fisher

Expert in international news reporting, storytelling, and advocating for refugees and vulnerable children

As World Vision's senior public relations manager for disasters and international news, Lauren works to draw attention to a wide variety of humanitarian crises—most recently the Syria conflict and the global refugee crisis.

Lauren led media relations efforts for the public launch of World Vision's For Every Child campaign and played a major role in emergency communications responses following Typhoon Haiyan, the Nepal earthquake, and the earthquake in Chile. She has represented World Vision in local, national, and global media, and has taken journalists to Rwanda, Jordan, Lebanon, and Niger to tell the stories of people in need.

Prior to joining World Vision, Lauren earned degrees in English and political science from the University of Pittsburgh. She spent several years as an Emmy®-nominated television news reporter across the U.S. and Germany.

Lauren lives with her husband, Jason, and two sons in South Haven, Michigan.

worldvision.org/speakers | speakers@worldvision.org

World Vision is a Christian humanitarian organization dedicated to working with children, families, and their communities worldwide to reach their full potential by tackling the causes of poverty and injustice. Visit worldvision.org for more information.